HEALTH CONVENTION.

THE DELEGATES. The National Convention of Health Boards met The National Convention of Health Boards met yesterday at noon in the smaller hall at the Marcole Temple. The object of this assembling has been previously published in THE NATIONAL REFUNDICAN, and should be by this time well known to the public. At the organizing there were but few delegates present, many not having arrived, and others, who had reported at the rooms of the Board of Health. Board of Health, were out on the street sight-seeing, ovidently forgetting the hour appeinted for the convention. Among these present were Dr. M. A. Arnholt, Dr. A. Arthurs, Bresent were Dr. M. A. and free commitation as to the best method of reducing the truths of science to useful and much seeded results in practice. It has regard also to the improvement of the internal construction and solice of the various health boards throughout the country, thus correcting any existing defects, and rendering them more efficient in the great work of protecting the health of communities.

I congratulate you upon the orthodox spirit which universally prevaits in respect to the much abused interests of hygiene. A few recent years have developed from a crude and undigested material a broad and comprehensive relence, thallenging universal admiration. Even the severable profession of physic, whose mission it is to cure existing disease, is to-day found debating, in a spirit, it must be admitted, of singular disinterestedness, the problem of prevention, at the risk of awaking, ere long to the consciousness that its occupation, like Otheilo's, has departed,

In the evening Dr. T. S. Verdi gave the delegates of the convention and a few invited friends a handsome reception at his residence, No. 1405 G street nerthwest. After a short while spent in interchange of courtesies and the enjoyment of social conversation, in which the delegates from one section became well acquainted with those one section became well acquainted with those from another, the company was invited to partake of supper. The table presented an clegant appearance, and was loaded down with an abundance of everything the market affords which is tempting to the appetite. Full justice was done the repart, and at its termination the guefferent turned to the parlor, where a few pleasant hours were passed, and then they returned to their hotels.

It contained two plagmas, or slate of earthenware, by G. Schopin, Paris, cash three feet in height and sixteen incless wide, with subjects of still-life colored and burnt in them with perfect delicacy and finish. One represents fish of various kinds, and the other displays a fine-gobbler, pinched and ready for the apit, and other accessories of the larder. The beautiful coloring, its varied base, the accurate drawing and smooth finish of these novel pictures, make them almost equal to the best specimens of Dutch still-life painting. Appropriate frames of butch and gold accompany them, and in a few days the public will have an opportunity of seeing them in a conspicuous position in the gallery. GALLERY.
